STREETS OF HONOLULU
... IN THE EARLY FORTIES

By GORHAM D. GILMAN in Thrum's Annual.

On the opposite Waikiki side of the street was erected a little later, perhaps, the first Hawaiian theatre. There are those who will remember it and the scenes enacted therein. The establishment of this theatre was largely due to the efforts of a set of young amateurs, among whom was Charles Vincent, a well known carpenter, and Mr. J. H. Brown, a man about town, and later Captain of the Honolulu Guards and Police Chief. One evening in particular was noted for the performance of the opera "Martha," of which Kamehameha IV. was the stage manager, while Queen Emma and Mrs. Bernice P. Bishop and other noted ladies of society formed its chorus. The programs were printed upon white satin. There may possibly be some of these souvenirs still to be found in Honolulu. Mauka of the theatre was the little cottage occupied by Mr. Charles R. Bishop and his young bride Bernice Pauahi Bishop. Mauka of this was the quite large residence occupied by William French.

The next parallel street was Richards street. Makai of King street was erected by Mr. B. Shillaber, an American engaged in the China trade, "the Bungalow," something after the style of the East India houses, where there was a general dispensation of bachelor hospitality. Mauka on the palace side of the street was a series of low one-story buildings occupied at different times by the Princess Victoria and her brother, Prince Lot, Kamehameha V. Next mauka were the old premises of the Summer family of which your courts have heard not a little in the last few months. Still mauka crossing a narrow lane, afterwards designated as Palace Walk, came a large open ground in which was the residence of Haalele. And mauka of this, coming up to Beretania street, was the residence of Kaeo, and Lahilahi, the parents of the late Prince Albert recently deceased. The Central Union church now covers the ground formerly occupied by these houses. Adjoining, on Beretania street, was the residence of the French consul, Jules Dudoit, in whose family were also Mrs. and Miss Corney, his wife's mother and sister; premises subsequently occupied for many years by Jas. Smith of land office memory. From this place the consul and his family moved in 1845, to their newly completed mansion on the opposite side of the same street, near Fort, known of late years as the Dickson premises. Mons. Dudoit had the reputation of being, among other things, a caricaturist, and often highly amused the merchants of the water front with his timely hits.

The next and last street running parallel was that known as Punchbowl street. There was on the entire length of this street, from the makai side to the slopes of Punchbowl, but one residence, the two-story house, built of coral, of Mr. Henry Dimond, mauka of King street. Beyond the street was the old Kawaiaha church and burying ground. A more forsaken desolate-looking place than the latter can scarcely be imagined. One to see it in its present attractiveness of fences, trees and shrubbery, can hardly believe its former desolation, when without enclosure, horses and cattle had free access to the whole space. The transformation was mainly owing to the labors of Mrs. Armstrong, wife of the missionary, who was pastor at one time of the church.

The houses of "The Mission" I had better leave to be described by some of the children whose homes were there.

Having now taken up the description of the streets running from the makai side of the town mauka, and also having mentioned Queen and Merchant streets running at right angles to the others, we will now turn to the three remaining parallel streets, namely King, Hotel, and Beretania. Beginning at the Nuuanu stream end of King street there were a few scattering native houses near the river side. The first house that we notice was a store kept by Isaac Montgomery, a true son of the Emerald Isle. He had been fortunate in business and had a fair financial standing. It was generally believed that the temptations of ready money, a quick sale even at small profit, induced him to supply the enterprising Australians with goods desirable to keep up their trade. On the same side of the street was a square medium-sized, plastered adobe house owned by Capt. John Meek. This was used as a lodge room for the new Masonic lodge, the first organized in Honolulu, if not in the Pacific, under the name of "Le Progrès de l'Océanie." This antedated somewhat the formation of the Odd Fellows Lodge, and many of the business and professional men of the town were initiated as members. I hold a certificate in the handwriting of Lahilahi, King Kamehameha IV., as Worshipful Master of the Lodge.

The next premises on that side of the street, as I remember, was occupied by natives and joined the premises of the Blonde, already mentioned. On the mauka side of the street were the large grounds of Capt. John Meek, extending almost the entire length of the block to Nuuanu street. Capt. Meek was one of the noted characters of the place; a retired ship master who had settled in the islands years before and become possessed of large tracts of land and herds of cattle. He shared with Stephen Reynolds the duties of pilot.

Crossing Nuuanu street on the makai side were a row of native houses with lanais, used for a fish market. The first principal building, and a conspicuous one, was the Seamen's Bethel. At the time of our arrival there was no stated occupant of the pulpit. Rev. Daniel Dole, who came with the reinforcement of missionaries was requested to take charge of the little congregation made up of foreign residents of different nationalities in the one place where it seemed possible to gather those who, though differing widely in politics and social amenities, met in this little upper room and united in divine worship. A story was told which marks the estimation in which the British consul, Mr. Charlton, was held, to the effect that those interested in the service, wanted a name for a new singing book which had been gotten together for the use of the congregation. Among other names proposed was the "Honolulu Lyre," to which objection was made that we already had a notorious Honolulu liar, (referring to Charlton) and some other name was selected. Not the least interesting part of the congregation was the gathering of the children, particularly of the members of the royal school, consisting of the four grandchildren of old Kamehameha, of whom three became kings, and also the families of Mr. and Mrs. Gulick and Mr. and Mrs. Emerson, names which have become noted in many lands for their missionary efforts. These and other members of missionary families, (there were but very few children of the residents as distinguished from the missionaries), formed the majority of the Sabbath School, the only one in town taught in English.

There was no other conspicuous building on this side of the street up to Fort street; only some few native houses where fish and poi were sold. Opposite the Bethel on the mauka side of the street was a one-story, white-plastered adobe building, standing end to the street, which was occupied as a tailor's shop by one C. H. Nicholson, a man of large size but finely proportioned, dressed immaculately in the finest of white linen, but to use a common expression, "as black as the ace of spades." When he and his Hawaiian wife, who matched him well in size, took their promenades they attracted general attention. The shop was the favorite rendezvous for the gossips of the village, who generally gathered there in the evening, to discuss the events of the day. This building had the same location which for so many years has been occupied by Castle & Cooke.

A little blind alley between high adobe walls led from King street to Hotel street coming out at Thompson's famous saloon, a man who although he kept a saloon told me that for years he did not know the taste of liquors. Continuing in the direction of Waikiki, we came to the large premises of Hannah Holmes, or Mrs. Jones, as she was at one time the wife of the American consul. At this time the house was the most pretentious in the town, built of coral, with high basement and broad steps leading up to wide verandas; in the early times, a place of convivial hospitality. One day a native servant of Mrs. Holmes, who was herself a Hawaiian, came to the store where I was clerk and offered a single silver spoon for sale. The circumstances were so unusual that my employer, Mr. Ladd, sent me up to her house to see if she had authorized the sale, or whether the native had come improperly by it. Going to the house I met Mrs. Holmes with her son, afterwards Judge Robert Davis. Not being at that time familiar with the Hawaiian language, and supposing that Mrs. Holmes did not understand English, I told my story to her son, who spoke perfectly correct English. Rather to my embarrassment he turned to his mother, and said in as good English as I had used, "Mother, you have heard this young man's story, what about the spoon?" She replied in English, evidently understanding the language, having been three times married to Americans, "It is all right, I sent the spoon to be sold as I wanted a little money."

These premises were afterwards used as the Globe Hotel. Part of the grounds are now occupied by the Odd Fellows' building on Fort street. There was a singular little building at the corner of Fort and Hotel streets, which was almost an excrescence on the adjoining property and marred the line of the street. The owner was very averse to selling, and it remained for years an eyesore to all passers by.

Passing Fort street and beyond the corner now occupied by E. O. Hall & Son, Ltd., there was a long stretch of property occupied mostly by natives. Alapai street had not yet been cut though, and the first house that I remember was that of Anton Silva, a Portuguese, an old resident, at the foot of Richard street, and at the junction of Merchant and King streets.

On the mauka Waikiki corner of King street and Fort were some native buildings which afterwards gave place to a wooden building erected for S. H. Williams for the disposition of his large stock of dry goods, in which store I was a clerk for some time, afterwards McIntyre's bakery. The next premises were the large property, well walled in, of the high chiefs, Paki and Konia, parents of Mrs. Pauahi Bishop. There was a fine large straw house with wide veranda, ample grounds, and a long row of servant's houses. One of the beautiful ornaments of the place was a fine large tamarind tree, planted the day of Mrs. Bishop's birth. Next adjoining was the estate of Pilikoi who was ranked with the hulumanus of the King. They were the personal attendants of His Majesty, the King, and wore the regalia of the famous yellow feather capes on occasions of state functions, hence their name. From there out to Richards street there were no houses other than those occupied by natives.

Richards street, by the way, was not laid out as it now is, nor named until after the death of the Rev. William Richards for whom it was called.

We now come to the square occupied by the palace. This building was built of coral with a high basement and one-story, high studded and sloping roof with a large lookout room on top. It was divided into a large hall through the centre, a large reception or throne room on the right, with two rooms on the left. It was mainly used for public purposes, the king preferring the quiet quarters of the cottages in the yard, where he lived according to his chosen Hawaiian style. Some

GREAT CURTAIN SALE

33 1-3 PER CENT
REDUCTION.

There is a world of truth in the dictum attributed to Gladstone that nothing except the MINT can make money without advertising. All the same, some folks may imagine that advertising is an expense which must be borne by customers.

But no inference could be more fallacious.

Paradoxical though it be, we would be unable to sell at our well-known close margins were it not for the large sums we spend in publicity.

In other words, liberal advertising begets large sales, and large sales admit of SMALL PROFITS.

This CURTAIN SALE is not advertised to make money. OUR OBJECT IS to clean up and close out our present stock of CURTAINS if a GENUINE REDUCTION of 33 1-3 PER CENT will do it.

very brilliant receptions were held there to which the public was generally invited with all the official and distinguished guests who happened in town. A little incident may not be out of place here. Having received an invitation to attend one of the receptions of King Kamehameha IV., a friend and myself entered the grounds at the mauka gate, intending to pass around and enter at the front of the building. As we were passing the bungalow a friendly voice, somewhat familiar, hailed us and asked us to come up on the veranda. We accepted the invitation and were welcomed by the king himself, who invited us to seats and cigars. While chatting upon social events the king, suddenly, looking at his watch, said hastily, "Excuse me, gentlemen, I am due in the throne room in five minutes," and disappeared within. Passing to the front entrance of the palace, up the broad steps, and across the wide veranda to the brilliantly lighted rooms, we found a large company gathered. In a short time the band announced the arrival of His Majesty and presentations began. These were made by the officers of the court, dressed in full uniform, and with great formality. When our turn came, my friend Mr. Bartow, and myself were escorted by two of the officers to the presence of the king. We were announced with much formality by the stereotyped expression, "Your Majesty, permit me to present to you Mr. Gilman." With a formal bow on the part of both, we passed on, as if it were the first time we had ever been in the royal presence, while really it was only a few minutes since we had been smoking together.

In earlier days, under the reign of Kamehameha III., an accommodating arrangement was made by which all of the missionary friends who desired were presented before the hour of nine o'clock, at which time the music struck up some lively tune, which was an indication that dancing was about to commence, and our good missionary friends understood the hint and retired.

A short distance from the palace was a two-story coral house occupied by Kekaulaui and her husband Kanama, who were the parents of Lunaillo, who afterwards came to the throne as William, the First. There was one very modest building in the palace grounds, of very plain construction, without a window; the only light entering was through a heavy door which was the only opening. This was the tomb of the royal family, kings and queens. It was in this secluded retreat that Dr. G. P. Judd, King Kamehameha III's prime minister, found the only safe and quiet place in which he could enter his records of the passing events of the troublous times during Lord Geo. Paulet's reign. On the mauka borders of the palace property was the school building of the Young Chiefs' school, cared for and watched over by Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Cooke, formerly connected with the Mission.
